Dear Friends:

It is a pleasure to send greetings to everyone gathered for the 37th International Association for Energy Economics Conference. Welcome to New York City!

The relationship between economic growth and energy is critical as economies around the world struggle to develop energy resources in sensible, sustainable ways. This annual meeting will assemble the best and the brightest minds in energy economics, working to arrive at much-needed solutions to serious and timely issues.

I am confident that this IAEE Conference will be an excellent opportunity to share ideas and information about the latest trends and best practices and to network on vital research topics and evidence-based approaches. On behalf of all New Yorkers, I commend everyone who has come together for this critical conference, demonstrating their commitment to advance the understanding and application of economics across all facets of energy development.

With warmest regards, and best wishes for a productive and enjoyable meeting.

Sincerely,
